The Village that dares to speak its name

- Results of survey show 115 for and 66 against Village signs on Bank Street: Coun. Holmes
- Co-owner of Wilde's Adult Shop wants to see other gay-friendly monuments on Bank Street

The stretch of Bank Street between Nepean and James streets has for years been considered the city's LGBT village, but now there are street signs to make it official.

The city installed six "The Village" street signs along Bank Street on Friday morning.

Coun. Diane Holmes had sent 1,400 surveys asking area residents whether they wanted the signs.

Only 181 were filled out and returned, but Holmes said that's because most people weren't concerned about such a minor issue.

"When I went door-knocking in the businesses along this stretch from Nepean to James, it was pretty similar to what the residential community is saying," said Holmes. "Most of the businesses were not very concerned."

"It's six small signs, that's all it is."

In August, Holmes said she had supported the designation for many years, but was waiting for the Bank Street BIA to change its stance and support it.

The BIA's executive director, Gerry Lepage, could not be reached for comment.

Glenn Crawford, chair of The Village Committee, which pushed for the designation, didn't downplay the significance of the decision after seeing a sign at the intersection of Bank and James streets.

"I think it's a historic moment for Ottawa and our community," he said.

"It's six years of work that I and the committee and our community has been lobbying for. It's pretty exciting to see the culmination of that work up on the streets."

- City looks at easing ban on filming on transit
- 'No disciplinary action' will be taken against the bus rider who took cellphone video of ranting driver: Deans

JESSICA SMITH
@METRONEWS.CA

The city is reconsidering a bylaw forbidding video recording on buses after a rider recently filmed a threatening, foul-mouthed rant from a driver on the 96 to Kanata.

Transit commission chair Diane Deans said she is recommending the city change the bylaw, which prohibits riders from taking photos and video on platforms and buses, with an exception for images taken for "personal use."

"This bylaw was enacted in 2007. It was intended to protect the security of transit services, it was a post-9/11 security measure," said Deans. "I do believe that it's dated."

Deans said the part of the bylaw that allows photos taken for "personal use" is too nebulous — especially now that photo-sharing websites and cellphone cameras are so common.

Passing the buck over Occupy protest

► Officials shirk responsibility if time comes to shut down activities

 JESSICA SMITH
@METRONEWS.CA

As mayors in other Canadian cities try to relocate or shut down Occupy protests, Ottawa's mayor said he does not have the authority to make that kind of decision, because the park belongs to the National Capital Commission.

"Any decision on people occupying Confederation Park would have to come from the NCC," Mayor Jim Watson said yesterday.

Asked whether it's the NCC's responsibility to decide whether the protesters are allowed to stay or not, a spokesperson for the NCC said police have "the lead" on that issue.

"This is not an event operating with a permit, this is a protest. In a protest situation the police have the lead," said NCC spokesperson Jean Wolff.

Ottawa police said that they have the responsibility to ensure the safety of the protest — officers monitor it regularly — but that it's not their decision to evict protesters unless there is an emergency.

Tough stance in B.C. cities

Victoria police are expected to issue court injunctions ordering the protesters to leave and Vancouver city officials are beginning the process to do the same. Quebec City officials ordered protesters out by yesterday.

New show puts lawmakers in the hot seat

 JOE LOFARO
@METRONEWS.CA

There's virtually no limit to the types of questions Canadians get to ask MPs on ichannel Television's new political Q&A show, FAQMP.

The Ottawa production has hosted MPs Dean del Mastro and Ralph Goodale already since the show debuted on Oct. 24, and next Monday's guest will be Green party Leader Elizabeth May. The show's host, Karyn Pugliese, said MPs have to answer whatever question they are dealt over the Internet on the spot, as was the case with May.

"There are questions on her for everything, like what it's like to be a party of one in Parliament," said Pugliese. "Somebody wanted to know if she would legalize pot and her answer to that was right off-the-cuff, 'Yep.'"

Pugliese said interest in the show grew around the realization that many people are already engaging with politicians on Twitter by attempting to participate in political debates.

Viewers can visit faqmp.ichannel.ca to vote for the next guest MP and whoever gets the most votes wins a spot on the show each Monday night. They can also submit questions in advance for whomever is chosen, and during the broadcast viewers can participate in a live chat online. When the cameras roll, it's Pugliese's job to make sure the MPs don't beat around the bush.

"(Viewers) want longer answers. They want to not hear sound bytes, but more fuller explanations," said Pugliese. "Sometimes I'll just say, 'OK, let's get to the meat of it — it's yes or it's no,'" she said.

Probe into pedestrian deaths in Ontario

► Chief coroner's office reviewing all fatalities in 2010 ► Results expected to be published in spring 2012

JOE LOFARO
@METRONEWS.CA

Ontario's chief coroner's office will review all pedestrian fatalities in the province in 2010.

The announcement comes just two weeks after the coroner announced a similar review will be launched to look into the province's cy-pling deaths. That review will investigate fatalities between 2006 and 2010, while the pedestrian death review will only examine deaths from Jan. 1, 2010 to Dec. 31, 2010.

Dr. Bert Lauwers, deputy chief coroner, investigations, will lead the review, which aims to identify factors that played a role in the deaths and make recommendations to prevent future pedestrian fatalities.

He said the review doesn't signal a new problem in road safety, as the number of pedestrian fatalities in Ontario tends to be relatively consistent, at an average of about 113 per year.

"When you think about it, pedestrian fatalities are likely almost entirely preventable," said Lauwers. "The real problem is that they continue to happen."

An expert panel of stakeholders will assist in the review, but the public is encouraged to make recommendations too.

"Some of the stories you get from the public are compelling because they're sometimes stories

► Social networks are knocking down barriers between work and private life ► For employers and employees, navigating the new territory means finding a balance between tweet surrender and a closed Facebook

Checking your Facebook or Twitter feed from the office?

Maybe you're not allowed to, but experts say it's increasingly difficult for employers to enforce policies that disconnect workers from social networks.

"There's a lot of fear. Some companies are staying away from it, some companies are embracing it and there's a whole lot of rogue stuff going on," said Robert Collins, a consultant and former chief information officer for Cognos, a firm purchased by IBM that produces software that tracks employee performance.

Collins said while some managers worry about productivity loss, there's no evidence to show social media or Internet use has any impact on productivity overall.

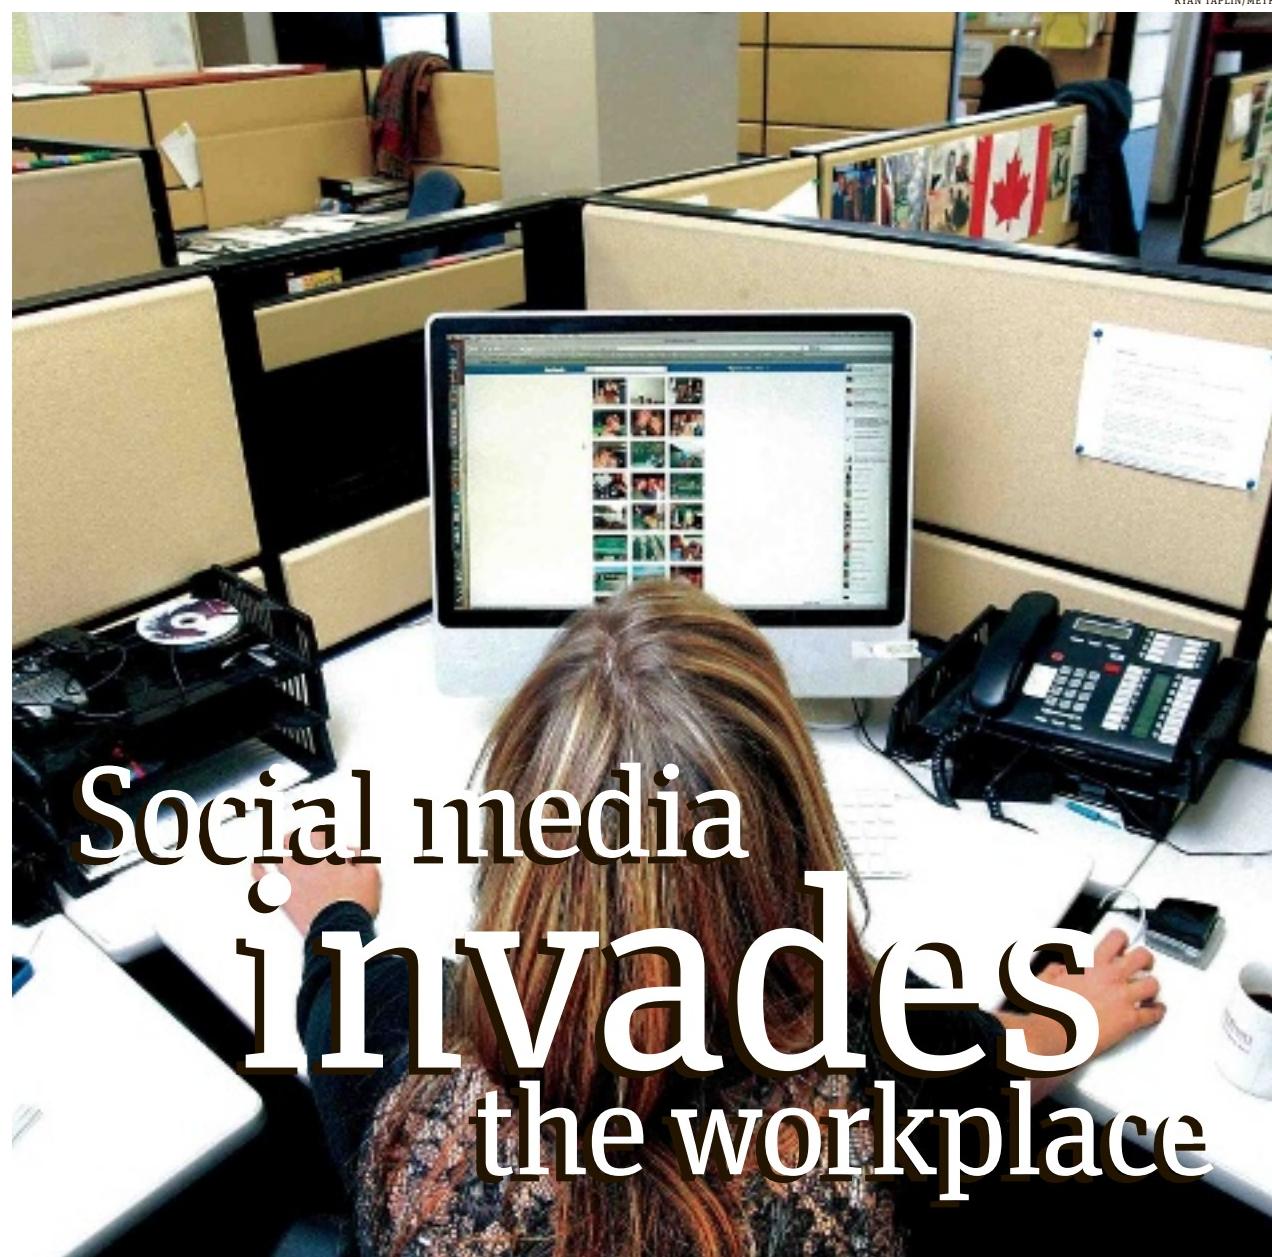

"Before this technology people found other ways to waste time, chatting to co-workers or on the phone," he said. "There will always be problems with individuals. Those problems have to be addressed individually."

With mobile devices, it's no longer possible or even desirable to simply close off access, said Collins. For some workers, particularly those in communications, there's even a potential productivity gain, he said.

Employers need to face up to reality — social media is here to stay, he said.

"If your organization is not there on Facebook, not there putting out tweets, putting out a blog, somebody is going to fill the vacuum and they're not going to be doing it in the interest of your company," he said. Having a strong social media presence can counteract rogue or critical tweets, he said.

Employers also need to tell employees what is and isn't acceptable on social media. Some employers see personal social media use by employees as reflecting on them and some even ask employees to use their personal accounts for business purposes.

Social media invades the workplace

A look at some of (very recent) history's most popular social media tools

The first Internet-wide instant messaging service still surprisingly has over 100-million (active?) accounts registered, says Time Warner.

Now named Windows Live Messenger, Microsoft reported in 2009 its baby still attracted more than 330-million active users each month.

Friend-what? One of the original social media sites redesigned in 2011 as a gaming site. It now boasts over 115-million anti-social users.

No. 1 social site from 2005-2008, MySpace now subsists solely on the coolness of owner Justin Timberlake, who bought a stake in it last June.

As of July 2011, Facebook had more than 800-million active users, including half of Canada's population, and, most recently, grandma.

In five years, Twitter has nabbed 200-million users. A fraction of them account for 200-million tweets per day.

SOURCE: WIKIPEDIA
(WHO ELSE?)

"There isn't any law on any of this. It's all in the realm of corporate policies," said University of Ottawa law professor Michael Geist.

Collins and other experts say firms reap huge payoffs in extra time worked due to employees using mobile devices and laptops at home.

Linda Duxbury, professor and expert on organizational health at Carleton University, said that, in her research, the intrusion into home life isn't balanced by employees using social media or running errands online at work.

"It's all one way. The expectation is that you do work at home," said Duxbury, adding people always had this pressure, but technology makes it easier.

Collins and Duxbury both said employees need to set rules about when they will and won't be connected.

"It's better to have that conversation with your boss when it isn't a problem," said Collins.

"I might tend to a private email or a private post while I'm at work, or I may be doing a work post while I'm at home. This very rigid distinction we used to have between work and play is no longer there."

MARK PERRY, ASSOCIATE COMPUTER SCIENCE PROFESSOR AT THE UNIVERSITY OF WESTERN ONTARIO IN LONDON, ONT.

Would you show it to your gran?

Wow. That was some party.

Great pics, too. So what did grandma think of them?

Before you post anything too personal to Facebook or Twitter, heed an expert's advice.

"It's best not to post anything that your grandmother wouldn't like," said Mark Perry, associate computer science professor at the University of Western Ontario in London, Ont. "Because it will come back to bite you at some point."

Perry said you should not only be wary of what you post, but how you post it.

"They should pay close attention to their privacy settings," Perry said when asked what employees should guard against to avoid getting in trouble at work.

And heads up: Watch those emails. If you're sending one titled "jerk boss," you might try "jerk beef" instead.

"There is software nowadays that can monitor email, so that it can search key words," Perry said. "It will select that out of the ingoing and outgoing email to employees." ● JIM REYNOLDS

Quickest way to be de-friended? Post an ad, says expert

Want to be de-friended on Facebook?

Want to go from followed to unfollowed on Twitter?

No? Then stop regularly self-promoting your job or business from your social media account.

"It's about relationships first and sales second," warns Halifax-based social media expert Kathy Colaiacovo.

She should know. It's her business to do so.

Colaiacovo runs Time

On Task Virtual Assistant, where she sets up and manages social media marketing for small businesses and entrepreneurs across Canada and the United States.

"I wouldn't have had this business five years ago," said Colaiacovo, whose client list has grown to several dozen.

"Almost every one of my clients has found me online," she said. "So without Facebook, Twitter and LinkedIn ... I certainly wouldn't be in a position I would be in right now."

Colaiacovo has a few tips for those attempting to harness the power of social media for work, which more companies are doing and they now expect their employees to do the same.

"You don't want to have them inundated with (updates)," Colaiacovo advised for those who are using personal social media sites for work. "In particular on Facebook, you can use lists so that you can ensure that certain groups don't see certain updates."

And don't make it all about you, she warns.

If you do find you're losing friends, Colaiacovo said it could be you're doing too much business networking.

"It comes back to what kind of content they're using and how much they're putting out," she said. ■ HEATHER GILLIS

Dos and don'ts

Some of Kathy Colaiacovo's dos and don'ts for using social media at work.

- Do fill out your bio information. That's where people will make snap decisions on whether to follow you.
- Do pick a user name reflecting your purpose, company, brand or who you are.
- Do post using the 50/30/20 rule. 50 per cent business-related information, 30 per cent personal (things you would say at a networking event) 20 per cent sales.

- Don't follow more people than follow you. You'll look like a spammer.
- Don't join too many groups of pages. You won't be able to network effectively.
- Don't post the same kind of update multiple times. Post useful information others will see has value.

- No cheers here. In 2008, a New England Patriots cheerleader was given the boot after Halloween party photos surfaced on Facebook showing her holding a Sharpie next to a passed-out man covered in offensive graffiti.

Attack on attorney unacceptable: Lawyers

Defence lawyers have denounced an attack on a Montreal attorney last week.

Gilles Dore, 58, who has represented biker-gang members among his many clients, was badly beaten in the borough of Outremont on Friday.

Richard Prihoda, president of the Defence Attorneys Association of Montreal, said that if the attack is found to stem from Dore's work, then it is more than just an assault. "It's not just an attack on one lawyer, it's an attack on the whole judicial system," he said.

Dore is currently involved in a Hells Angels megatrial being held in Montreal.

Another foot surfaces in B.C.

A foot discovered Friday on the shore of Sasamat Lake in Port Moody, B.C., is different from eight other feet found in the province over the past four years, the B.C. Coroners Service says.

Unlike previous cases in which feet were found in running shoes in saltwater, this foot was found in a hiking boot in fresh water, said Stephen Fonseca, manager of identification and disaster response.

Rust on the metal eyelets of the men's Cougar hiking boot suggests it was in the water for a long time. However, there is no evidence that the foot was mechanically removed.

DND mulls rescue ops: Documents

Plucking Canadians out of the world's hot spots is a growing area of study for military planners. Defence department documents show that in the aftermath of the Libyan

The evacuation of Canadians from Libya last spring, and the massive rescue effort from Lebanon in 2006, has brought a new focus to such operations.

Veterans wage battle to get off the streets

► Civilian life can pose a host of problems for vets as they fight addiction, despair ► Number of homeless vets projected to rise

PAUL CHIASSON/THE CANADIAN PRESS

As Canadians look forward to Remembrance Day to honour those who fought for their country, a small but growing army of homeless veterans are trying to get their lives back on track.

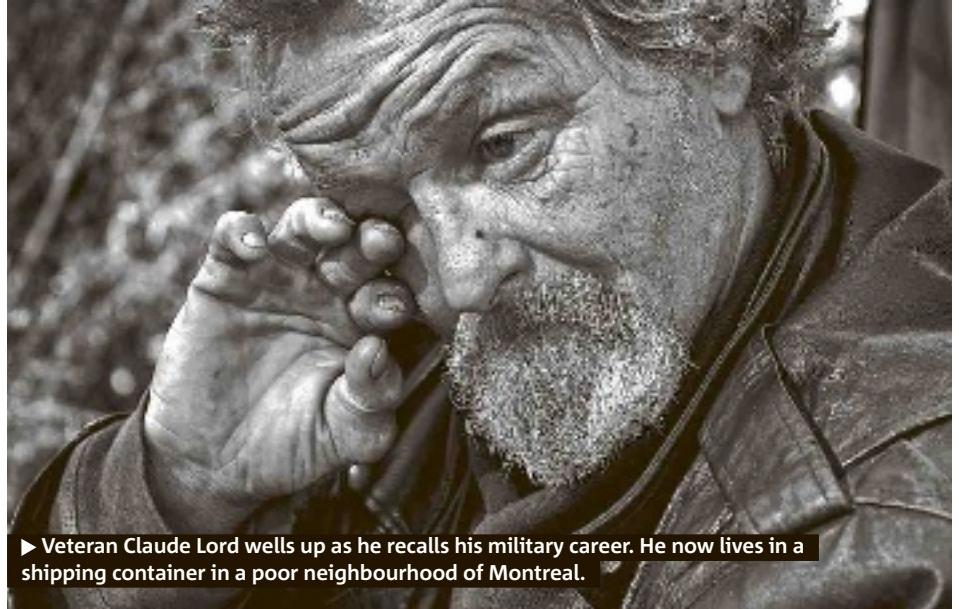

Many of them once wore the smart, crisply pressed uniforms of Canada's Forces.

Now they're struggling with alcoholism or drug addiction. They often lack basic life skills and don't know where to turn for help. And their numbers are expected to grow as troops return from Afghanistan.

"I think we're hitting the tip of the iceberg," said Dave Gordon, executive director of the Royal Canadian Legion's Ontario Command. "There's a need for a national program."

Research shows that a typical homeless veteran in Canada is 55 years old and left the Armed Forces 27 years ago after six or seven years of service. Most are single or divorced and better educated than other people living on the street.

The drinking often starts

during the soldiers' tours of duty, says researcher Susan Ray of the University of Western Ontario, who interviewed 54 homeless vets for her study.

But homeless veterans are taking steps to get off the street. Across the country, small organizations of former soldiers are seeking out their homeless peers and matching them with shelter, social services and government programs.

"We call ourselves 'ground support,'" said Jim Lowther, founder of the Veterans Emergency Transition Services network in Halifax, which is being copied in other provinces. "We stick with them until they get back on their feet. It's been really successful."

Ray and the veterans want Ottawa to extend transition services for vets into years, instead of the current six months. The services would be aimed at teaching life skills, improving mental health and providing more outreach workers to veterans.

Veterans Affairs, for its part, says it is already doing this in Canada's biggest cities. And it works on a less formal basis with community groups across the country. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Jailed terrorist returns to court

► Lawyers for 'Carlos the Jackal' claim he was denied materials needed to prepare for trial, including DVDs

A defiant and smiling Carlos the Jackal, one of the most dreaded terror masterminds of the Cold War, went on trial again yesterday — this time over four deadly attacks in France nearly three decades ago.

The 62-year-old Venezuelan, whose real name is Ilich Ramirez Sanchez, went before a special Paris court on terrorism-linked charges. He is already serving a life sentence handed down for a triple murder in 1975.

Ramirez, who sowed fear across Western European and Middle Eastern capitals during the Cold War, is charged with instigating four attacks in 1982 and 1983 that killed 11 people and injured more than 140 others in France.

He has denied any role in the attacks. The trial is expected to last six weeks.

ty in France, which does not have the death penalty.

Wearing a blue jacket, greying beard and wavy hair brushed back, Ramirez smiled as he entered and then identified himself to the court as "a professional revolutionary" — striking a combative pose from the outset.

With three gendarmes at his side and dark sunglasses in his hands, Ramirez variously raised a fist in defiance, weaved in anti-Zionist rhetoric into his diatribes and smiled to the gallery that included controversial French comic Dieudonne.

"He's in a fighting mood as always," Isabelle Coutant-Peyre, Ramirez's lawyer and amorous partner, told reporters outside the courtroom before the trial began.

She said there was "no reason" for the trial nearly 30 years after the events, and accused prosecutors of putting him on trial for "propaganda or some other interests rather than the ones of justice."

But Francis Szpiner, the lawyer for some civil parties to the case, countered that the trial was important to show that terrorists will always be pursued and to mark "the end of the culture of impunity" for them. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MAKING THE MOST OF HIS MOUSTACHE

SHE SAYS ...

JESSICA NAPIER
METRO

Remember when November was just that boring month sandwiched between pumpkin-spice-latte season and the holidays? With no long weekends in the mix, the 30 unspecial days following Halloween would just drag by without any consequence.

Now, this once-dreary month has been taken over by an army of moustached do-gooders. November has been rebranded as Movember — or, as I like to call it, Ironic Facial Hair Appreciation Month.

While fundraising efforts to battle prostate cancer are commendable, fellas with newly acquired 'staches need to realize that these charitable whiskers can be a little uncomfortable for your partner.

If you find yourself getting close to a Mo Bro during this hair-raising month, here are a few things to keep in mind.

In the early stages of moustache growth, your man will probably be working with some pretty weak pre-pubescent hairs. Depending on his growing capabilities, this unsightly stubble may stick around for the entire month. Try to look past the tragic teen 'stache and remember the noble cause behind his creepiness. Is wispy upper-lip hair a turn on? Absolutely not. But there's something pretty sexy about a man who's willing to donate his face to a worthy cause.

If you're used to being with a clean-shaven guy, it's going to take a while to get on board with kissing a moustachioed man. It'll feel a bit like making out with a broom at first. Worst-case scenario, you might even find some stray pieces of food in that soup strainer. Just take a deep breath and remember all the times he called you sexy despite your unruly leg hair.

Depending on his level of creativity, your man may decide to groom his altruistic facial hair into a themed mo. Popular styles include the Captain Hook, the pencil, the horseshoe, the Charlie Chaplin, the toothbrush and, of course, the always creepy handlebar. Some thematic moustaches will make you laugh, but most will make you cringe with horror. Resist the urge to look away. Instead, be supportive and walk proudly down the street with your Hulk Hogan look-alike.

Once his 'stache is fully formed, your man is going to be deluded into thinking that he is the new Magnum P.I. In reality, he'll probably look more like a C-list porn star. To be fair, there are very few men who can pull off a mustache. If you think he might start considering a year-round moustache, quickly insist that Tom Selleck's ladies'-man status is most definitely the exception, not the rule.

It turns out that catching cancer early is not always as important as has been thought.

Some tumours are too slow-growing to ever threaten your life. Some are so aggressive that finding them early does not make much difference. And today's treatments are much better for those somewhere in the middle.

Those complexities are changing the longtime mantra that cancer screening will save your life. In reality, it depends on the type of cancer, the test and who gets checked when.

"We can find cancer early. We can reduce the burden of the disease. But along the way, we're learning our tests are not as perfect as we'd like," says the American Cancer Society's Dr. Len Lichtenfeld. "We're learning that we're now finding cancer that would in fact never cause harm."

Now cancer specialists are struggling to find a new balance: To quit over-promising the power of early detection and to help people understand the tests themselves have risks — while not scaring away those in need of scanning.

Doing a good deed saves one man's life

A Canadian man who helped another motorist change a tire in western Wisconsin had his good deed repaid when that motorist saved his life just minutes later.

Victor Giesbrecht, of Winnipeg, was driving near Menomonie on Saturday evening when he stopped to assist with a tire change. The Wisconsin State Patrol says the 61-year-old then drove away and suffered a heart attack a few kilometres later.

Giesbrecht's wife stopped the pickup truck and waved her arms, and the motorist whom they had helped just a moment earlier stopped and performed cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

Patrol Sgt. Michael Newton told the Star Tribune that if Giesbrecht hadn't helped with the tire, his rescuer may have remained stranded too far away to help.

"If he had been a few more miles down the road ... it could have been a different outcome," Newton said. "It's an interesting turn of fate."

Giesbrecht was hospitalized in serious condition yesterday.

Arbitrator's ruling a blow for airline union

► New four-year deal expires March 2015 ► More than 65 per cent rejected deal but only 73 per cent voted

The union representing Air Canada's flight attendants slammed an arbitrator's decision yesterday that imposes a tentative agreement negotiated by its leadership but rejected by employees last month.

Canada Industrial Relations Board arbitrator and chairwoman Elizabeth MacPherson endorsed Air Canada's position that the provisions be imposed without alteration.

"I'm disappointed and frustrated," CUPE national president Paul Moist said.

Moist suggested that the government's constant interference in collective bargaining tipped the scales in favour of the company.

However MacPherson noted the union won improvements in the second tentative agreement, unanimously recommended by its bargaining committee.

Air Canada said it was pleased with the decision to implement terms of the deal reached in September.

MacPherson said her decision resembled what would have been achieved had the case not been referred to an arbitrator and instead had run its course through collective bargaining — including the right to a strike or lockout. A strike was averted when federal Labour Minister Lisa Raitt referred the dispute to the quasi-judicial board.

The Canadian Union of Public Employees had wanted the arbitrator to improve upon the second ten-

Europe wary as Greece works to divide power

Rival Greek political parties tried yesterday to hammer out a historic power-sharing deal to secure a $179-billion US rescue package, but markets remained wary and European leaders kept up pressure by holding back a vital bailout loan.

Socialist Prime Minister

George Papandreou — who is expected to resign — and conservative leader Antonis Samaras held negotiations, hours after reaching the landmark agreement to form a coalition for the next 15 weeks. The new administration's main job will be passing the new bailout

But as of last night no power-sharing deal had been announced, and it wasn't clear if talks with top Greek officials were still under way.

Chef cooks local, abroad

- Canada's Massimo Capra jets around the world in a new series called Gourmet Escapes
- Master chef spreads the word about eating natural, local and seasonal products

Canadian celebrity chef Massimo Capra cooks local from afar in his new series Gourmet Escapes.

Flying to locations including Holland, Iceland and Switzerland, the mustachioed, jovial Italian native gets his hands dirty as he meets with farmers and chefs to highlight how various cultures benefit from eating natural, local and seasonal products. He also makes mouth-watering meals out of area offerings (golden beet risotto, anyone?).

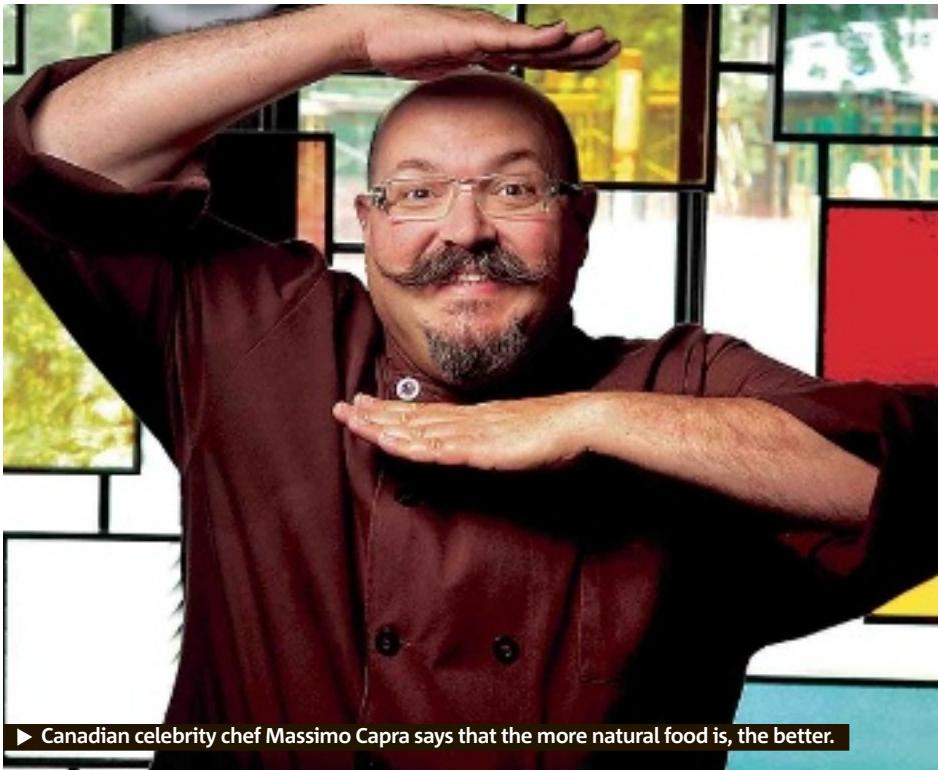

In the first episode, which debuted Nov. 2 on Travel+Escape, the Toronto-based Capra visits Northern Ireland, donning a beekeeping suit to extract honey from hives and stopping by a farm where free-range pigs are raised.

In Wednesday's installment, he goes to Lunenburg, N.S., where he and a local chef go on a fishing expedition that yields mussels, lobster, scallops and a whopping 150-pound halibut.

"The more natural the better it is, and the old-fashioned ... ways are always the best," Capra said in a recent phone interview.

"That's exactly what I've always been about and that's why my food isn't complicated. I call it 'rustic elegance.'

"I want (clients) to taste the thing that they order. I don't want them to have this weird experience where peas are not real peas but they're actually, I don't know, pureed dust with powder on top and mixed with some chemical that turns them into little spheres that look like peas, taste like peas but are not peas at all."

Capra's culinary chops and amiable nature have made him a beloved TV personality. He has a regular spot on Citytv's daytime talk show Cityline and was on the Food Network series Restaurant Makeover.

He also has two restaurants in Toronto — Mistura and Sopra — and is a national column writer and author of two cookbooks.

Capra fell in love with cooking as a child helping out in his mother's kitchen in Cremona, Italy, where he plans to travel later this month to tape an episode for Gourmet Escapes.

He grew up on a farm there until age 14, eating only what was grown or raised by his family, and never wasting leftovers.

"Every Saturday my mother would go into the chicken coop and pick a victim and pet the chicken a little bit and yank the neck and that's it, you know what I mean? And it's done," said Capra.

"You cook it and you eat it and on Sunday, you have a beautiful meal and then you eat the leftovers for the next three days. And amongst that you try to eat as much vegetables and grains as possible."

"So it wasn't meat every single day or twice or three times a day. It wasn't bacon in the morning, burger at lunch and steak at dinner. It was never like that."

Capra has maintained that sensibility throughout his culinary career, cooking with local, in-season ingredients wherever possible.

"Can you get any better nutrients than local and in-season? I don't think that you can," he said, noting some of his clients sometimes don't understand why they can't order fresh fruit at his restaurants in the middle of winter.

"We want to have our strawberries and our raspberries all through the year, right? We're not supposed to. You don't get anything out of those strawberries and raspberries because they are not flavoured. On occasion, yeah, bring them in, by all means — we still need our lemons, we still need our accoutrements in the kitchen."

"But if you train yourself to eat local and in-season, it's the best thing you can do for yourself and for your own environment."

Calm after the Fallout

► Patrick Stump goes for R&B sound during FOB hiatus ► Says he's still interested in the band ► Patrick Stump's original band, Fall Out Boy, has been on a break for two years.

Patrick Stump is still having a hard time getting people to understand what he's trying to accomplish with his solo effort, Soul Punk.

Though the album is upbeat and dance-filled — miles away from the emo-rock music he made with Fall Out Boy — he says he wasn't trying to jump on the club-centric groove that pop music is focused on these days.

Instead, he sees his first full solo effort as an R&B record in the vein of Prince or Michael Jackson, his childhood inspirations.

"If it sounds like modern dance music, I think it's by coincidence," said Stump late last month.

The frontman for Fall Out Boy says some people couldn't comprehend his artistic vision; that's one reason why there are no collaborators on the record (though Lupe Fiasco is on the remix for This City).

"(It's) an ongoing thing," said Stump, who is on a nationwide tour. "A lot of people still ask me to play Fall

Out Boy at these shows, and I'm like, 'But the rest of the music is so different, I don't know (if) that would fit in.'

The frontman for Fall Out Boy says some people couldn't comprehend his

And then I also think it would be really disrespectful to the band to go out and play their songs without them."

Stump insists the platinum-selling band hasn't broken up, but adds: "I'm not sure everyone is into it right now. I'm in, but I haven't heard from anybody."

La Toya Jackson spoke to an Associated Press reporter on the way out of the courtroom saying, "Michael was looking over us."

Jackson's mother, Katherine Jackson, says she was confident this would be the outcome of the trial.

Members of the family wept quietly after the guilty verdict was read. Dr. Conrad Murray was handcuffed and taken into custody.

Jackson's doctor convicted

► Guilty verdict in involuntary manslaughter trial for deceased pop star ► Doctor faces up to four years in prison

Michael Jackson's doctor was convicted yesterday of involuntary manslaughter after a trial that painted him as a reckless caregiver who administered a lethal dose of a powerful anesthetic that killed the pop star.

The verdict against Dr. Conrad Murray marked the latest chapter in one of pop culture's most shocking tragedies — the death of the King of Pop on the eve of the singer's heavily promoted comeback concerts.

The jury deliberated less than nine hours. The Houston cardiologist, 58, faces a sentence of up to four years in prison. He could also lose his medical license.

Jackson died on June 25, 2009, and details of his final days dribbled out over several months.

The complete story, however, finally emerged during the six-week trial. It was the tale of a tormented genius on the brink of what might have been his greatest triumph with one impediment standing in his way — extreme insomnia.

Throughout the trial, Jackson family members watched from the spectator gallery, fans gathered outside with signs and T-shirts demanding, "Justice for Michael," and an international press corps broadcast reports around the world. The trial was televised and streamed on the Internet.

Prosecutors portrayed Murray as an incompetent doctor who used the anesthetic propofol without adequate safeguards and whose neglect left Jackson abandoned as he lay dying.

Murray's lawyers sought to show the doctor was a medical angel with former patients vouching for his skills. Murray told police from the outset that he gave Jackson propofol and other sedatives as the star struggled for sleep to prepare for his shows. But the doctor said he administered only a small dose on the day Jackson died.

Lawyers for Murray and fence expert blamed Jackson for his own death, saying the singer gave himself the fatal dose of propofol while Murray wasn't watching. A prosecution expert said that theory was crazy.

Murray said he had formed a close friendship with Jackson, never meant to harm him and couldn't explain why he died.

Raising Hope springs eternal

► Carpe Diem mindset of show's crew responsible for increasingly wild narrative ► Character back stories explored

 PAT HEALY

METRO WORLD NEWS IN BOSTON

The writers of Raising Hope come up with such reckless back stories (mild mannered main character Jimmy Chance's angry goth phase, his father's decision to fake a kidnapping to go live in a Winnebago with a stranger, etc.) it almost seems as though they are constantly thinking the show is about to be canceled.

But creator and executive producer Greg Garcia says the moment that they found out they were renewed for a second season was actually when they started taking these wild liberties.

"If anything," says Garcia, "it was more like, 'Hey, we're green lit for a second season. Let's do something and get crazy with this!"

It's not like the show began with the most regular premise — Jimmy, a 23-year-old grocery store employee has a one-night stand with a serial killer, gets her pregnant, and has to raise their daughter after she is executed.

Meanwhile, Jimmy still lives at home with his senile great grandmother and his parents, who are only about 15 years older than he is. But Garcia and company took it a few steps further.

"I think just toward the end of the season, we — the writers and I — sat down and thought about done during the year, so we knew what we kind of had to stick true to as far as the reality of things."

This season has seen similar bold back story choices. In the premiere, Jimmy learns from an old home video that he was a child prodigy.

As he tries to reclaim his talent, he can't match the younger version of himself, played hilariously by YouTube prodigy Greyson Chance, who not only had the same last name as the characters, but who also looks a lot like Lucas Neff, who plays Jimmy.

"His YouTube videos blew my mind along with all of the other teen girls out there," says Neff.

Raising Hope airs Tuesday nights on Citytv.

Next week's episode follows along with the show's newfound tradition of unexpected guest stars adding to the back story.

BIEBS TO TAKE PATERNITY TEST

DOROTHY ROBINSON
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

Justin Bieber is putting the kibosh on Mariah Yeater's paternity suit filed in San Diego Superior Court last week.

A source confirmed to Access Hollywood that Bieber is going to take a DNA test when he returns from Europe, where he is attending the MTV Europe Music Awards with girlfriend Selena Gomez.

Yeater claims she became pregnant after an encounter in a bathroom with Bieber after a concert last year. The star "went from cute and gushy to just ... more aggressive," says Yeater in an exclusive interview with The Insider about their alleged 30 seconds of unprotected sex, which claims resulted in the birth of her son.

Bieber has denied the claims, telling the Today show recently that he's "never met the woman."

He's not stopping at proving his innocence, either: Once the test comes back vindicating the Canadian pop star, his team plans to hit Yeater with a hefty lawsuit "to show there are consequences when somebody trumps up phony, hurtful allegations against a celebrity," a source says.

Prostate cancer

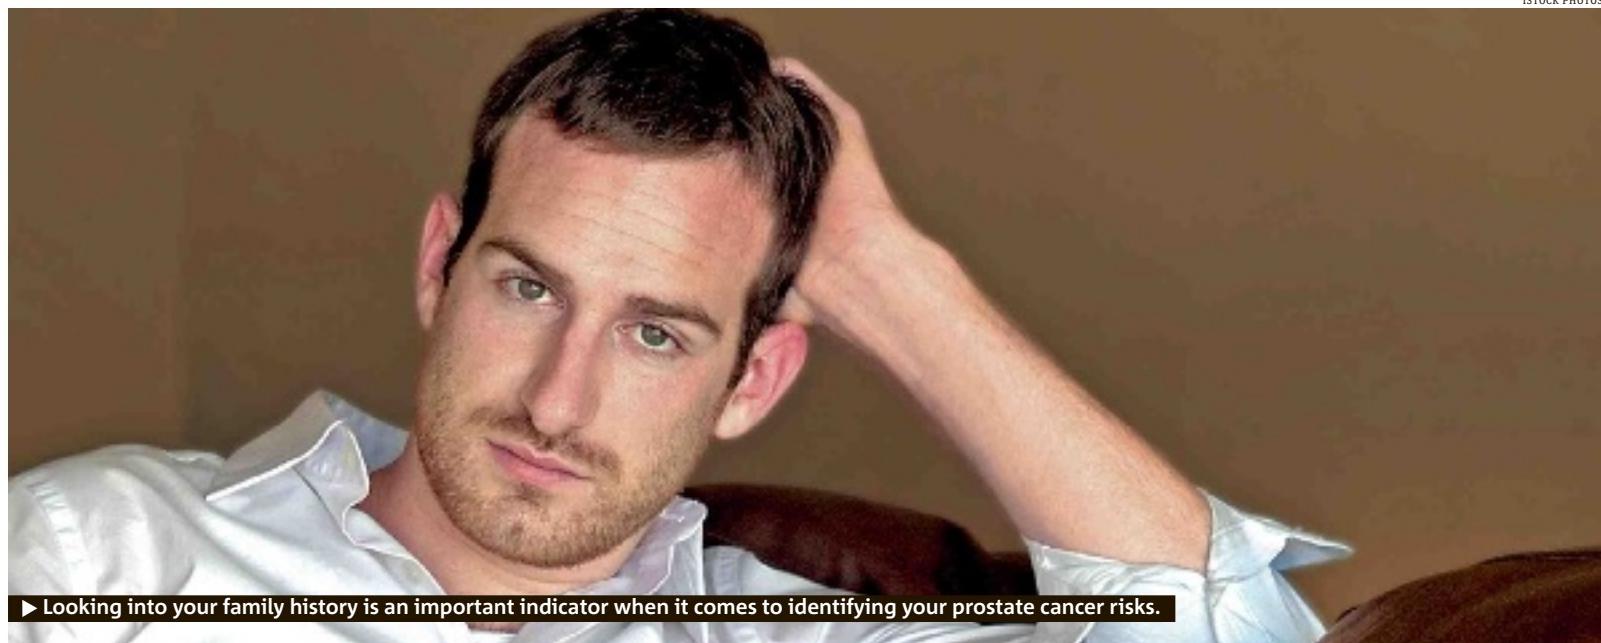

Prostate cancer is the most common type of cancer among Canadian men (after non-melanoma skin cancer). In 2011, an estimated 25,500 Canadian men will be diagnosed with prostate cancer, and 4,100 will die of the disease. One in seven men will develop prostate cancer in his life.

The statistics are disturbing. According to one survey, fewer than half of Canadian men see their doctor on a regular basis. The study also found that almost one in four men haven't had a medical check up in at least five years. All indications are that men wait until their symptoms are severe before seeking medical attention.

Whereas women are "conditioned" from an early age to see their doctor for an annual PAP test, which gives them an opportunity to review their overall health, guys just don't develop this habit, says Dr. Jonathan Kerr, a family doctor in Belleville, Ont.

"Young healthy guys between the ages of 15 and 35 years typically don't see the doctor, which breeds unfamiliarity and even discomfort at the idea of seeing a doctor," says Kerr. He adds that young men often don't see a doctor until they're "sick or have broken something."

It could be that men are averse to feeling vulnerable, or to putting themselves in someone else's care, says Dr. Mel Borins, a Toronto family physician. However, Borins thinks that men's brains are also actually "hard wired" to protect their children and spouse rather than themselves.

Finding the time to see the doctor is another barrier for busy men. But an annual physical exam takes only about 20 minutes, and is an important time to review a man's health history.

Prostate news you can use

► From robotic arms used in surgery to serial testing, major strides are being made to battle prostate cancer

PAULINE ANDERSON
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA

Prostate cancer can be detected early with a PSA test (a blood test that measures levels of prostate-specific antigen) and a digital rectal exam (DRE). But these tests are not 100 per cent accurate.

A higher than normal PSA level can be due to an enlarged prostate as well as an indication of cancer cells.

Even if cancer cells are present, some grow so slowly that surgery, drugs or radiation may not be needed right away.

Also, a test may suggest that you have cancer when you really don't and this may lead to unnecessary treatment.

If a cancer is detected, doctors may suggest further tests, including a transrectal ultrasound or a biopsy of the prostate. Researchers are making headway in improving prostate cancer detection tools and in perfecting treatment approaches. Here are some areas they're looking into.

Genetic contribution

The Canadian Prostate Cancer Genome Network brings together researchers from across the country to sequence the DNA in different tumor types.

Thanks to this $20 million genetic mapping project, treatment decisions could eventually be based on personal genetics.

To treat or not to treat

The idea of closely watching some patients with prostate cancer and treating them only if and when necessary is taking hold in Canada, says Dr. Joseph Chin, professor and chair in the division of surgical oncology at the University of Western Ontario in London.

Nomograms

Dr. Robert Nam, a Canadian Cancer Society researcher at McGill University, has developed a new tool that may more accurately calculate the risk of prostate cancer.

It relies on age, ethnicity, family history, prostate size, and overall health, as well as the standard PSA and DRE test results.

Serial PSA testing

Research suggests that if a PSA level increases quickly, it may indicate cancer, so checking levels repeatedly may pick up this rapid rise earlier.

Improved imaging

Magnetic resonance imaging machines (MRIs) "are stronger, better and more powerful" than ever and are able to more precisely tell doctors where to biopsy, says Chin.

Diet and lifestyle

Emerging research indicates that a high-fat diet may raise risks for prostate cancer.

High-fat meats that are charred or cooked at high temperatures, as well as preserved meats like bacon and deli meats, could pose the highest risk.

Other research that included Canadian centers recently revealed that vitamin E and selenium are not protective against prostate cancer, he says. He and his colleagues advise men to be physically active and to not smoke.

New test

Canadian researchers have helped develop the PCA3, a molecular urine test that could help identify more aggressive prostate cancers.

Improved surgery

Canadian Cancer Society researchers are looking at implanting tiny radioactive seeds in a prostate tumor.

It may prove to be a more precise way of treating patients while reducing side effects.

Robotic-assisted surgery

This procedure, available in London, Toronto, Montreal, Edmonton, Calgary and Vancouver, is growing in popularity.

It is constantly being perfected, although the outcome is comparable to standard prostate surgery, says Chin, who did the first such procedure in Canada in 2004.

He adds that the procedure is not for every patient, and depends on such things as the size of patient, the location and extent of the cancer and how aggressive it is.

Focal therapy

Researchers in London and Toronto are collaborating on a project to improve detection and treatment of localized prostate cancers.

"The prostate is the size of a walnut and if we can somehow confirm that the cancer is not affecting the whole walnut but is confined to a pea-sized area within that walnut, then we might be able to just treat the pea," explains Chin.

Hormone therapy

Researchers are investigating whether hormone therapy affects quality of life for prostate cancer patients. Cancer treatments may cause hot flashes, lethargy, weak bones and anaemia.

VISITING YOUR DENTIST IS THE FIRST STEP!

It is easy to see that some people might look at the title of this article and feel they are attending a meeting of Dental Phobics Anonymous! That is certainly not the intent here. You will not be asked to stand up, say your name and admit you do not visit your dentist!

However, there is a good chance that many of you do not visit your dentist on a regular basis. Some studies have indicated that, in North America, as little as 45% of the population visits their dentist at least once per year. On a more local level, only 45% of local Ottawa seniors reported visiting the dentist at least once per year.

As dentists, we consider that a rather alarming statistic. First of all, due to the potential for your oral health to change rapidly, we recommend that you visit your dentist at least twice per year. For those individuals experiencing specific dental issues, such as periodontitis, your dentist may recommend more frequent visits.

We understand that there are a number of factors that interfere with your ability to make it to the dentist. Work days seem so much longer than ever before as technology seems to have us permanently linked to the office. Single parents or two income families often struggle to balance work life with getting their kids to whatever activity they have that night.

Dr. George Parry
Dental Surgeon

Even if you want to go to the dentist, life can be so busy it just seems to get in the way!

It is certainly not our place to lecture anybody about the importance of good oral health. That being said, we would be remiss if we did not, at the very least, remind you just how important regular dental visits are!

Your mouth is truly a window into your overall health. People in poor oral health tend to be more likely to experience poor overall health as well! The bacteria that builds on the teeth can penetrate into your bloodstream and cause infections to spread, or result in cardiovascular diseases!

Sometimes, an underlying health condition that may not seem to be linked to oral health can be spotted by your dentist. For example, some dentists have spotted signs of undiagnosed diabetes in patients. Imagine how their health could have been further compromised without that dental visit!

Then, of course, there is the potential life saving diagnosis your dentist may provide through early detection of oral cancer. Visiting even once per year is not sufficient to increase the likelihood of early detection. You need to get to the dentist at least every six months to provide your dentist with the best chance to catch oral cancer as early as possible.

We understand that this may seem like a large investment in time. But it is your health we are talking about. And if one of your children has to miss one hockey practice because you have a dentist appointment, we think that beats the option of discovering oral cancer when it is too late!

So invest the time to see your dentist. Because regular dental visits are a healthy habit...and healthy habits lead to healthy lives.

Though it offers salads, sandwiches and pasta, I know to order pizza at a pizza restaurant. I opted for a personal-sized ham and pineapple. It was undeniably good.

The crust had a faint crunch on the bottom. Sweet pineapple chunks and slices of ham sat on the slightly tangy tomato sauce before being buried under melted cheese. There was lots of cheesy goodness. And, unlike some places, the ham did not overwhelm the mix of ingredients.

Colonnade Pizza has been around for more than 40 years.

Though you won't find fig and goat's cheese on its pies, you will find traditional pizza that is reliably good.

Looking to order take-out pizza again tonight?

Try something different like this Tuna Basil Pizza made with naan bread. It's tasty and has less calories than the take-out version.

If naan isn't to your liking, try using Greek pita bread as an alternative.

Preparation:

1 Place naan on a flat surface and spread pizza sauce over top of bread. Sprinkle with cheese and tuna and top with black olives.

2 Place under preheated broiler for 3 minutes or until naan is crisp. Serve immediately.

SOMETIMES WE ALL NEED A LITTLE HELP FROM OUR FRIENDS

Last week I had an experience that I absolutely want to share with all of you.

I was scheduled to deliver an important speech to the executives of several very prominent hotels here in Shanghai. As I arrived at the hotel I struggled to get out of the very small taxi. In my struggles, all of a sudden I heard (much to my horror) a huge rip. Yes, my pant crotch, from front to back, was wide open and everyone outside of the car was exposed to my Calvin Klein's. A true wardrobe malfunction was in full swing. So what to do? I did not have enough time to go back to my hotel to change and I could not stay like this to deliver my speech. So, stuck in the back of the taxi feeling very embarrassed and awkward, I asked my host, Ms. Catherine, who had just experienced this display, if she had someone at the hotel who could sew my pants in an emergency.

And this is the part that's so fabulous. Ms. Catherine, a senior hotel vice president who was meeting me, calmly said, "Oh Mr. MacPherson don't worry, this is not the first time this has ever happened. Please follow me to a private area and we will call the seamstress right away."

And then while walking together she graciously said without missing a step, "While we wait for the seamstress can I order a coffee or tea for you?"

You can all imagine how embarrassed I was. But Ms. Catherine, with good etiquette skills, made me feel very comfortable in such an awkward situation.

I was so lucky to have Ms. Catherine there. She put me at ease, didn't draw any unnecessary attention to me and we all got through it painlessly. At the most important moment, Ms. Catherine made me feel calm and comfortable and for that I am eternally grateful, so thank you!

SCHOLARSHIPS, BURSARIES CAN OFFER RELIEF FOR STUDENTS

If you are a high school student considering attending a university or college after graduation but are worried you won't be able to afford the expense of a three- or four-year undergraduate degree, possibly followed by graduate studies, you are not alone.

"Students are facing more financial barriers than ever before, thanks to high tuition fees, more student debt and less government funding than 30 years ago," says Roxanne

Dubois, the chairperson of the Canadian Federation of Students.

With annual tuitions averaging $5,000, plus the cost of books and living expenses, it's no wonder that by the time students earn an undergraduate degree, they could be up to their ears in debt. The good news is there is some relief at hand. "Scholarships, bursaries and grants are sums of money designed to help pay tuition fees that students don't have to pay back," says Dubois. These "gifts" can run anywhere from $500 to covering full tuition costs.

Students can apply to the Canada Student Grants Program and the Canada Student Loans Program; each province has a similar financial aid program. "You can apply for both as long as you meet the criteria," says Dubois.

Don't forget to check out the post-secondary institution you are either planning to attend or in which you are already enrolled. The school's website should have information about the annual scholarships, bursaries and grants it offers, or you can call the student financial aid office, students' union office or student services office for information.

If you want to dig deeper, you can make some calls to local public agencies that might offer scholarships to certain special interest groups, such as women, francophones or First Nations peoples.

FINDING THE RIGHT BALANCE

Losing her spot on the honour roll is the price Amy Pielaszek has to pay for working 30 hours per week as a drug store supervisor.

"It's stressful at times," says the 20-year-old Mohawk College student. "It's hard to balance everything. If I work the night before I have a test, I'm kind of screwed."

Results on a recent psychology test tumbled to 60 per cent from an earlier score of 92. She had to work the night before her test. "In high school I was on the honour roll, but this year it's debatable," she said.

Pielaszek isn't alone. A survey of professors and librarians at Ontario universities found that paid work during the school year could be hindering students' studies. As tuition fees and cost-of-living expenses continue to rise, students are looking for ways to offset escalating costs.

Post-secondary counsellors say there is a maximum number of hours a student should work to successfully manage a full course load. And many work beyond that.

At Calgary's Bow Valley College, that number is 20 hours. Besides offering counselling, time management and budgeting help, the school also has child-care and emergency bursaries that students can access to help balance their expenses.

Carleton University uses the 60-hour rule. If a student is taking 15 hours of classes per week and studying the recommended bare minimum of two hours for every hour of lecture, that totals 45 hours, leaving 15 hours left for paid work.

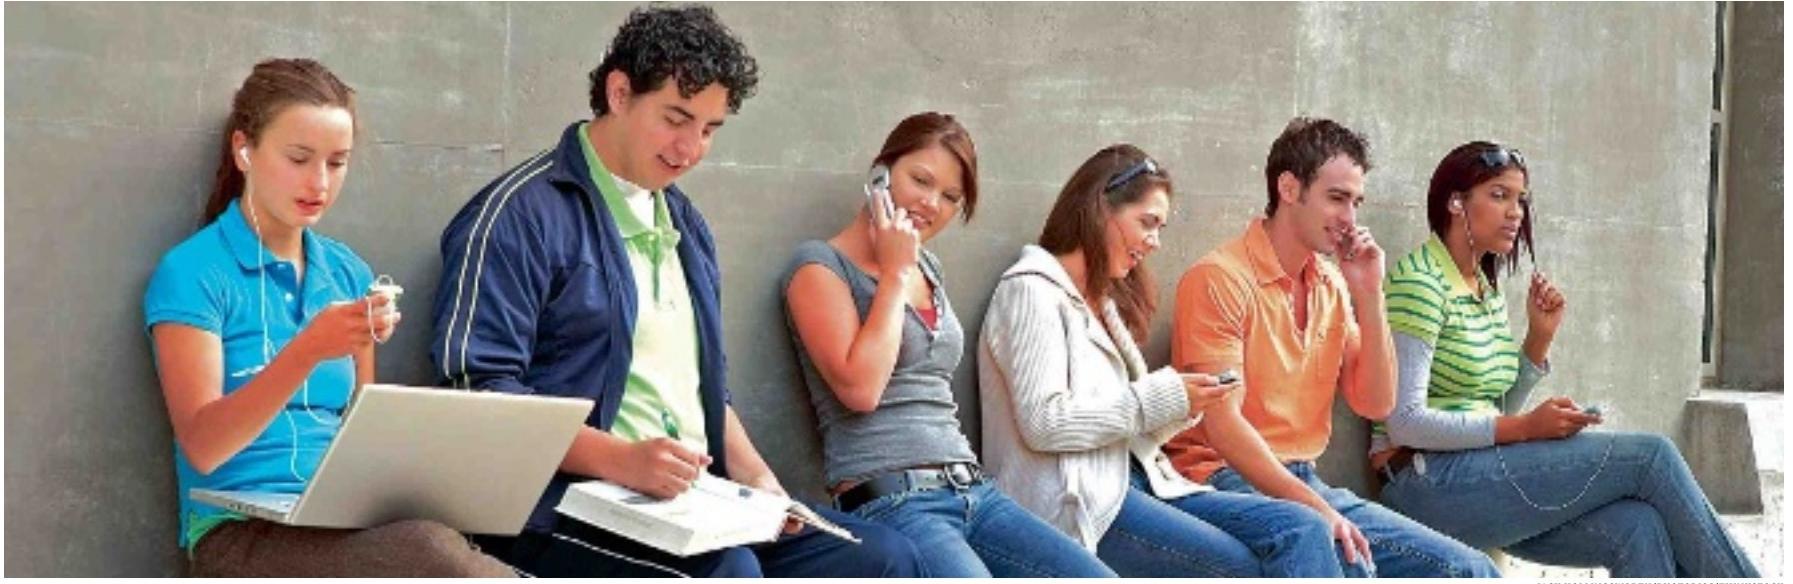

Students are often reluctant to reveal the number of hours they actually put in for fear they will be advised to quit their jobs, says Carleton's academic adviser Bryan Tinlin. In reality, the fix is in setting priorities.

Hitting the books while working up to 30 hours per week drove Ian Stead to near burning out in September. Assignments were turned in late and not as high calibre as he would have liked, so the 28-year-old Algoma College student decided to trim his work hours and reduce his course load.

"I was earning more than enough to get by and that's why I made the decision to cut it down," says the second-year professional writing student, who now works 15 to 20 hours per week. "I feel good now and I'm not stressed about it at all." —Kelly Putter

COSY WORLD OF TRENT U

STUDENTS ENJOY CLOSE CONTACT WITH FACULTY

For Hugh Elton, acting dean of Arts and Science (Humanities) and a professor of Ancient History and Classics, it was a moment that neatly sums up the Trent University experience.

"I was chatting with a new student one day and he told me he'd transferred from a large university in Toronto," he recalls. "He said this was the first time he'd ever actually had a conversation with a professor. I was flabbergasted."

The exchange speaks to one of the key advantages of Trent University: Close contact between students and faculty. Established in 1964, Trent University has an enrolment of 7,800 full- and part-time students, and an exceptionally low student-to-faculty ratio of 19 to 1.

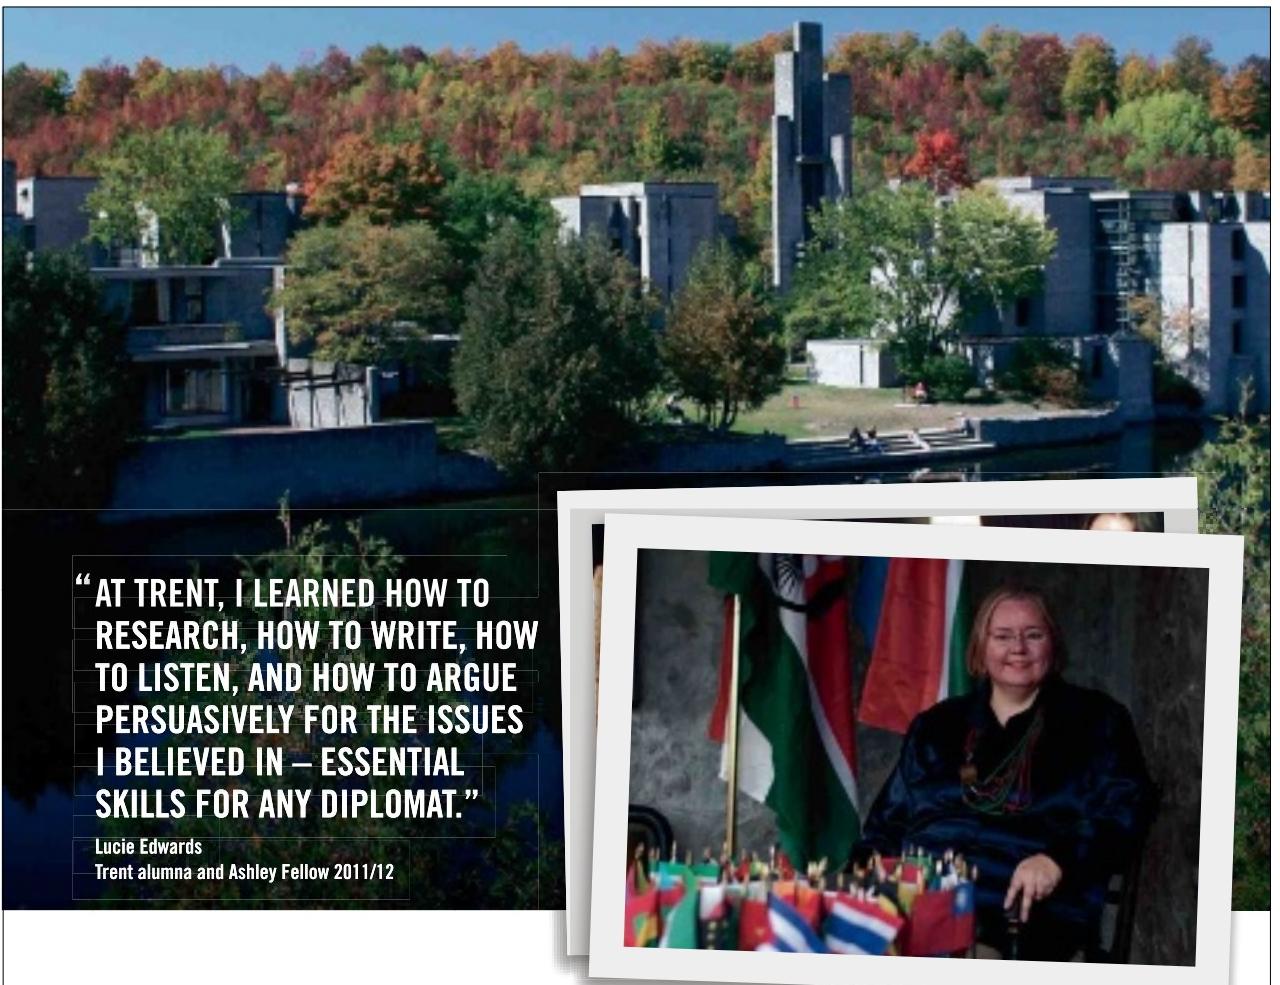

Close contact with faculty was certainly one of the factors that convinced Ottawa's Dylan Hunt to choose Trent. "I had looked at other Ontario universities, but Trent's class sizes and natural setting really appealed to me."

The school's primary campus in Peterborough is one of the prettiest in Canada: More than 1,400 acres, much of it parkland, nestled along the shores of the Otonabee River. Although the setting is purely Canadian, the school is remarkably worldly.

Approximately 700 students from abroad attend Trent University in any given year.

NEW COURSES DEBUT

Trent University will offer several new degree programs starting in September 2012: Archaeology (BA or B.Sc.); Bachelor of Arts and Science (limited enrolment program); Journalism program in partnership with Loyalist College (BA or B.Sc.); Media Studies (BA); and Sustainable Agriculture and Food Systems (BA or B.Sc.).

"AT TRENT, I LEARNED HOW TO RESEARCH, HOW TO WRITE, HOW TO LISTEN, AND HOW TO ARGUE PERSUASIVELY FOR THE ISSUES I BELIEVED IN – ESSENTIAL SKILLS FOR ANY DIPLOMAT."

Lucie Edwards
Trent alumna and Ashley Fellow 2011/12

Lucie Edwards earned her Honours B.A. in History and Economics at Trent University. She went on to become High Commissioner to Kenya, South Africa and India. Today, she can be found working at the crossroads of science, the environment, and international development. Among the most research-intensive universities of its size in Canada, Trent is renowned for creating opportunities for students to flourish and develop as individuals and as global citizens. This made all the difference to Ms. Edwards who says, "Trent helped me develop the tools in public policy to deal with the big 21st century problems, like climate change and development."

HOLIDAY BUDGETING

FUN AND FRUGAL

LESLEY SCORGIE
MONEY@METRONEWS.CA

Does holiday spending make you sweat? Don't fret — take 10 minutes and prepare a holiday budget.

Take five minutes to write down who you need to buy for and approximately how much you'd like to spend per person. Add it up.

If you're like the majority of Canadian households, your shopping list amounts to around $1,000. Yikes!

Money is tight these days! So, take five more minutes and determine ways to cut back on your overall expenses. Reduce the number of presents.

Rather than buying individual presents for each niece and nephew, purchase a gift for the whole family like a board game or passes to see a movie. Better yet, draw names for a family gift exchange; one present per person and limit the dollar value. Scrap gifts for colleagues and bake treats instead. Reduce the amount you spend per gift. Buy presents in bulk from discount or wholesale stores.

Make handmade crafts or baked gifts. Shop in advance and spread out your purchases. Monitor online coupon sites like Groupon. Scale down your purchase; buy a smaller set of wine glasses or ½ carat diamond versus a full carat.

Budget for meals and entertainment. Rather than preparing a holiday dinner on your own dime, host a potluck dinner instead. Use coupons and don't overbuy; a smaller turkey and veggie dishes are sufficient.

The holidays are about spending meaningful time with friends and family. Your thoughts and intentions are what count, not how much you spend.

ALISON GRIFFITHS
MONEY@METRONEWS.CA

A September 2011 study by the BC Securities Commission has exposed an impending head-on collision that I've been warning about for years. The financial expectations of Canada's youth are on track to smash into their ever-diminishing financial reality.

The securities commission study surveyed over three thousand 17- to 20-year-olds across Canada.

They found that their expectations for the future

"The young are heading for financial disaster if we don't take action."

-ALISON'S MONEY RULE

were vastly different from current reality or what is most probably in the future.

Survey respondents expected to earn, on average, more than $90,000 in 10 years time. Unfortunately, 25- to 30-year-olds with post-secondary degrees are now only averaging $31,640.

These figures become even more ominous in the context of a recent Statistics Canada study showing that wages of those 20 to 34, across all levels of education, declined significantly in the 1980s and the trend has continued to present day, though at a lesser pace.

Now factor in unemployment for youth, which hovers in the 14 per cent range compared to the national rate of just over seven per cent, and the picture gets pretty bleak.

Adding menace to these statistics, over half of the 17- to 20-year-olds are already carrying an average of $8,000 in debt from credit cards, lines of credit, student loans and family borrowing.

By the time they graduate, according to a 2010 Vanier Institute of the Family Study, that amount will have swollen to $18,000 not including family debt or lines of credit.

And what about those debts? Almost half say they are setting aside money and will "definitely" or "very likely" have them paid off in five years, while 25 per cent are doing nothing.

How likely is that these debts will be paid off in five years? Not likely based on a September 2009 survey by the Canadian Payroll Association, where two-thirds of Canadians 18 to 34 reported they would be in trouble if their paycheque was delayed by only one week.

We simply can't afford to let a generation fail.

Many young people are in debt and job-insecure.

We must make every effort to reduce youth unemployment and help them avoid or pay down debt, particularly student loans.

Since it is financial literacy month this isn't only a good goal, but also an essential one.

RECYCLE FROG

Selling old gold and silver jewelry?
The bad. The ugly. The good.

Skyrocketing gold and silver prices has many consumers wondering how much their old or broken gold jewelry is worth.

The question you should be asking yourself is: where do you go to ensure you receive a fair offer? There are plenty of options but which ones pass the common sense test?

Option #1: New companies. Inflated promises. False advertising.

Anyone can post really high payout prices. There are no laws to protect unsuspecting consumers from misleading ads that promise to pay outrageous and unrealistic prices.

They use them to lure people in, then adjust weights, inaccurately evaluate material (eg. say something is 10kt when it's actually 14kt). The bottom line, people end up with less money in their pocket, not more.

Option #2: Mail away your gold. Hope for the best.

Most consumers feel uneasy about mailing their jewellery to one of the many flashy "Cash for Gold" type companies seen on TV. The truth is, several of these companies have received harsh criticism from consumer advocacy groups because of their notoriously shady sales tactics and low payouts.

So, if those ads featuring cash waving "customers" send a chill down your spine, it's for good reason.

Option #3: Recycle Frog, you be the judge.

Recycle Frog is an Ottawa-based precious metals recycling company that has built its business by serving today's more prudent middle and upper-middle-class consumer. Comprised primarily of ex-Royal Canadian Mint employees, Recycle Frog's payout rates are published, and consistently rank among the highest in the industry.

Was it just too good to last?

► Senators are no longer surprising opponents ► Need to find power play to end skid

The Ottawa Senators aren't catching anyone by surprise anymore.

Ottawa was expected to rank near the bottom of the Eastern Conference this season, but the Senators showed some resiliency during a six-game win streak that caught many off guard.

That roll salvaged a 1-5 start, but now Ottawa has dropped three in a row and lost the element of surprise.

"I think we're definitely getting more attention," said Senators forward Nick Foligno yesterday. "I think we were doing a lot of good things, but I think we've just gotten away from our game. We were finding ways to win and guys were coming up with big games, big goals. I think we need to get back to our full game."

The biggest difference between the winning streak and the losing skid is the Senators' sudden inability to score a power-play goal.

Ottawa's power play — once ranked the best in the NHL — has gone 0-for-9 in the past three games, the longest stretch this season without scoring on the man advantage.

"Sometimes the numbers can be misleading," said Jason Spezza, who has been held pointless in the last four games. "I don't think we've gotten away from what we were doing, I think we just haven't put the puck in the net."

"It definitely has to be

good for us. The power play, when it's going good, we're scoring and it's definitely an advantage when your special teams are good."

Like Spezza, Erik Karlsson has also been held pointless in the last three games. There's no denying the two are instrumental to the Senators' success on the power play.

"Sometimes you're going to have some games where you don't score any points even though you have great chances and maybe you should have," said Karlsson. "That's the way it goes. Sometimes they just keep coming and sometimes no matter what you do you can't get one."

Senators coach Paul MacLean hasn't been completely disappointed by his power-play unit, despite its lack of production. Ottawa remains the third best in the league with an extra skater, producing at a rate of 25.5 per cent.

"It still has generated a lot of momentum and scoring chances," said MacLean.

Filatov to AHL

Left-wing Nikita Filatov was re-assigned to the Binghamton Senators yesterday.

"The Buffalo game (a 3-2 overtime loss on Saturday) was the first time that I thought we didn't really generate consistently the way that we had been so that's the only time. But we need to get back.

"Having a power play that's effective certainly helps you win games as we've seen."

The absence of captain Daniel Alfredsson has also been an issue for the Senators. Ottawa has won once since Alfredsson was placed on injured reserve with a concussion.

"Every team is going to miss a guy like that," said MacLean. "He really balances out your offence. It gives another line another dimension, an ability to score."

Alfredsson has shown signs of progress and skated on his own yesterday. MacLean expects Alfredsson to undergo baseline testing today.

"He's progressing. He's made some progress the last couple of days which is very positive," said MacLean. "He's gone from riding the bike to actually skating. There's no timeline on it, but there's progress."

Crosby could be back this Friday

Sidney Crosby didn't say no.

He didn't say yes, either. But yesterday, the NHL's sidelined superstar said he could return from his 10-month concussion layoff as early as this weekend.

While the Penguins captain emphasized his status hasn't changed — and there is no target date for his long-anticipated return — he also said he isn't ruling out any game on the upcoming schedule.

Only a week ago, by

"I'll reiterate to you again, there is not a timetable or a date right now that we know and you don't."

PENGUINS COACH DAN BYLSMA

contrast, he said there was no chance he would play last Thursday in San Jose or Saturday in Los Angeles. Pittsburgh is enjoying a five-day break before playing the Dallas Stars at home Friday and the Carolina Hurricanes on the road Saturday.

"That's a possibility," Crosby said of returning

Friday. "Just like however many games left there are (a possibility). ... I'd love it to be (Friday), but I would have loved it to be on the West Coast trip, too. There are a lot of different guesses but, like I said, everyone's guesses are as good as mine."

There is guesswork involved because nobody seems to know for certain how much contact — or how little — Crosby must absorb during practice for his doctors to clear him to play for the first time since Jan. 5.

Crosby unexpectedly flew back to Pittsburgh from Los Angeles to meet Sunday with his concussion specialists, touching off talk that his return was imminent. However, he said he merely wanted to get the session out of the way so he could take part in team-building activities yesterday and today.

Penguins coach Dan Bylsma also said nothing has changed. Crosby goes through all drills during practices with his teammates, then is evaluated periodically by those overseeing his recovery to see how he is progressing.

"I just tell them how I feel. That's usually how it goes, giving feedback and letting them know how I'm feeling," Crosby said.
